

THE PROBLEM

WATER PENETRATION IN UNDERGROUND ROOMS

Attempts to hold water back using conventional measures and coatings have a high failure rate. Drainage systems based on the old drain tile system have inherent problems with silting and clogging. It is a simple truth that no matter how good the materials or workmanship, many old (and new) structures are simply too weak or too flexible for this approach to work in the face of water pressure.

Ironically, defects in waterproofing can go unnoticed for years because the ground is not waterlogged. However, the day the water main bursts, a drain cracks, a record level of rainfall occurs, or adjacent building work affects water conditions, this is the day the waterproofing will 'appear' to fail...

...and that is the one day that you really need it to work.
